In the spirit of this Halloween season, Special Collections wishes to highlight the first edition of Robert Louis Stevenson’s Victorian novella, The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde (1886).

The story of Jekyll and Hyde focuses on the efforts of London lawyer, Mr. Gabriel John Utterson to discover the on goings between his friend, Dr. Henry Jekyll, and the unusual Mr. Edward Hyde. After many mysterious meetings between the lawyer and Jekyll and Hyde, Mr. Utterson soon discovers that Jekyll and Hyde are within the same man. Dr. Jekyll began taking an unknown drug to explore the duality of his personality, creating Mr. Hyde. After depleting his stash of drugs to return to his natural state, Dr. Jekyll commits suicide to prevent the involuntary transformations to the devilish Mr. Hyde from becoming permanent.

The Scottish author wrote the story in the late autumn of 1885 while on bed rest, recovering from a lung hemorrhage. The idea of dual personalities came to Stevenson in a fevered dream, possibly altered by the author’s use of cocaine to help relieve the hemorrhage. Historians speculate Stevenson was also influenced by his friendship with Eugene Chantrelle, a convicted murderer executed in May 1878. Chantrelle was convicted of poisoning his wife with opium. The once respectable teacher is rumored to have even been responsible for numerous deaths in France and Britain by poisoning his dinner party guests’ meals.

NEW AND IMPROVED SPACES

Our remodeled study pods are one element of our multi-faceted approach to foster academic success.

The recent renovation has enabled the library to meet the demand of daily traffic—primarily during peak times of the semester. The nine new pods installed are outfitted with "smart" boards, soundproof glass, and new furniture for a better study experience on the first and second floors.

These pods can be checked out for a maximum of four hours. Please visit the Circulation Desk or call (940) 397-4753 for more information.

STAFF SPOTLIGHT

Ask Jason

Crazy cat stories, comic book posters, and an encyclopedia for a brain. These are precisely the reasons Circulation Manager, Jason Brezina is beloved by staff, faculty, and students at MSU Texas— that and the ginger snap cookies always up for grabs on his office desk.

The Oklahoma native who graduated with a Bachelor of Arts in History at MSU Texas, has worn many hats at the institution, serving for 22 years, and has held his current post for the last 16. His student assistants call him "The heart of the circulation dept.," and his knowledge has only expanded over time. So if you’re ever in a bind, need help with a book or up for a crazy story, just ASK JASON!
The Bonesetter’s Daughter
by Amy Tan
An American-born Chinese woman discovers the truth about her mother’s past that challenges everything she thought she knew about her life growing up.

EDITOR’S PICK
It’s always quiet on the third floor, but the fall breeze on this particular Friday afternoon brought an extra chill. The time was 5:45 p.m. and Ashley knew she had already been there too long. After all, it was Friday the 13th and the library closed at 5 p.m. She grabbed her items in a haste to leave when a dreaded sound shattered the unforgiving silence. She had heard the stories of the library being haunted, about why the fourth floor had been sealed off during renovation. But she had never been afraid of ghosts, not even as a child. The middle elevator doors shot open, "Out of Order" the sign read. Out of curiosity she stepped in, the elevator doors closed quickly behind her. There was only one button to press... "Welp" she thought, "Guess the only place to go is up.” Don’t believe our story? Ask anyone at Moffett ;)
